

Ken Crowell

Pueblo, CO

As a school that is embracing technology, our number one barrier to using new and promising models (such as flipped classrooms) is the internet connectivity at home and in neighborhoods (especially for students in families from lower economic means). Allowing ERate opportunities to follow the student - no matter where that student is attending class (home or a community center) has the best opportunity to impact student scores and increase our country's economic competitiveness.